

Seudah Shlishis, Parshas Tazria – Metzora 5766

At the third Shabbos meal, Mohorosh Shlit”a spoke inspiring words based on Lekutei Mohoran, Part II, Lesson 25, which discusses the importance of Hisbodedus.

Rebbe Nachman says: “The level of Hisbodedus is higher and greater than everything. In Hisbodedus, a person sets aside an hour or so to be by himself in a room or in a field, to speak out everything that is on his heart between himself and his Maker. He should put forth all sorts of logical arguments and excuses using graceful, charming, and appeasing words. And he should ask and beg Hashem that He should bring him close to Him to serve Him in truth. And this prayer and conversation should be in one’s everyday language [e.g. English].” (These are the words of Rebbe Nachman.)

Mohorosh explained that Rebbe Nachman reveals to us in this teaching that there is nothing higher than prayer and Hisbodedus – which is actually prayer in your own language – and that they are the gate and the entrance through which we come to Hashem (Lekutei Mohoran, Part II, Lesson 84). Certainly, we are all yearning to come close to Hashem and to attach ourselves to Him totally. But the main source of our distress is that we don’t know the path and the gate that leads to Him. In truth, the path and the gate are prayer and Hisbodedus, about which it is said (Tehillim 118): “This is the gate of Hashem; the righteous shall enter through it.” And the mouth is referred to as a doorway, as it is written (Micha, ch. 7): “Guard the doors of your mouth.” And through this doorway we come to Hashem. The more a person talks to Hashem and speaks out before Him everything that is in his heart with complete honesty and simplicity – as he would speak to a friend and as a child would speak to his parent – the more will Emunah (faith) become established and fixed in his heart. And then he will merit to feel the truth of Hashem’s existence, which hovers over and shields him always. Everyone can reach this level through increasing in prayer and Hisbodedus until eventually one’s entire being becomes prayer, as King Dovid wrote (Tehillim 109): “But I (ani) am [all] prayer.” And what part of a person is referred to as “I (ani)”? It is a person’s neschama (Lekutei Mohoran, Part I, Lesson 22). And when a person is deeply engaged in prayer, his “I” (ani; aleph-nun-yud; i.e. his ego) is changed into “Nothing (ain; aleph-yud-nun)”, which means that he ascends and cleaves to Hashem's endless light. However, the Satan attempts to weaken the light of emunah by discouraging a person from praying to Hashem. And then it is fulfilled in this person the verse (Yechezkel, ch. 1): "I was among the exiles," for his neshama is in a very bitter and dark exile where Hashem's endless light is hidden from him. If a person would know with a full heart that (Yeshaya, ch. 6): "The whole earth is full of His glory", and that Hashem stands over him when he prays, listening to every word coming from his mouth, then he would certainly pray with great enthusiasm and be very careful to think about every word of his prayer (Lekutei Mohoran, Part I, Lesson 62); and there would certainly be no sadness, laziness and heaviness in his prayer and he would truly pray as he should. However, the main cause of confusion in prayer comes from a lack of emunah (Lekutei Mohoran, Part I, Lesson 155). Therefore, the primary service of a person is to work on strengthening his power of emunah and to increase in prayer and Hisbodedus to Hashem at all times, for then, he will merit to ascend and cleave to the Supreme Light and he will taste the World to Come in this world. Happy is he and fortunate is his lot.

Mohorosh connected these ideas to our parsha in the following way. We find in our parsha the laws of the afflictions that come upon a person through forbidden speech. Instead of using his faculty of speech for prayer and Hisbodedus to Hashem, he speaks loshon harah (lit., evil talk; information which is derogatory or potentially harmful even if the information is true), rechilus (information that potentially can cause ill will between Jews) and other forms of forbidden speech, and as a result he is punished with tzaraas (leprosy - a physical affliction which is a manifestation of a spiritual illness; the primary cause is slander, but it is also a punishment for other types of anti-social behavior such as bloodshed, false oaths, immorality, pride, robbery and selfishness). At first, the afflictions only affect the walls of his house, to remind him to do teshuvah (to repent and return to the proper way); and the verse is fulfilled in him (Chavakuk, ch. 2): "For the stone shall cry out of the wall," as the very stones of his house call out to him to do teshuvah, to elevate and repair his speech, to begin to engage in prayer and Hisbodedus the way he should. Even the stones and beams of one's house bear witness to all of a person's deeds, as our holy Sages have said (Talmud Taanis 11a): "Who testifies against a person? The stones and beams of his house testify against him." Even in our time when there is no tzaraas, if a person's home has been damaged in some way, for example, a water pipe breaks or the ceiling leaks from the rain, it is proper for him to contemplate that from Heaven they are reminding him to do teshuvah and Hashem is having compassion on him by first striking the structure of his house instead of his body. If a person does not take these hints from Heaven, then the afflictions will begin to affect his clothing; his clothing being much closer to his body than the walls of his house. And again, Heaven is trying to arouse him to do teshuvah. And even today, when some mishap occurs to one's clothing, for example a garment suddenly rips or becomes soiled, it is proper to contemplate that this is similar to the tzaraas that can affect a person's clothing, as described in our parsha, and that once again Heaven is hinting to him to do teshuvah and to fix his speech through prayer and Hisbodedus. If after all this, he has still failed to do teshuvah, then the afflictions finally come upon his body and life becomes very bitter and dark for him, for in the Aramaic translation of the Torah the metzora (the person afflicted with tzaraas) is referred to as a "sagirah" (one who is closed off or shut in). And this corresponds to the Zohar (Parshas Tazria 49b) which describes the metzora as one who is: "sagiro d'nerhora ilaah", that is, one who is closed off from the Supreme Light – the light of the Shechinah. And then life is very difficult for him, for the doorway to holiness has been blocked off; and this doorway is prayer, as mentioned before. And he is left in a state of exile, which is an aspect of the verse (Yechezkel, ch. 1): "I was among the exiles". His main rectification is through the Kohein – the Tzaddik – who, as described in our parsha, must ostracize the metzora from all other Jews by sending him to live alone outside the city, as it is written (Parshas Tazria, ch. 13): "He shall dwell alone; his dwelling shall be outside the camp." And the main purpose of his isolation and solitude is that he should contemplate well his ways and be alone with Hashem and begin to fix his faculty of speech that he blemished through using destructive words that damaged people's relationships; that ruined friendships, marriages and people's livelihoods. For through solitude he can return to using his speech for prayer and Hisbodedus to Hashem and then he will be healed from his tzaraas.

The purification of the metzora is dependent upon his immersion in water, as it is written (Parshas Metzora, ch. 14): "He shall immerse his flesh in water and become pure." Immersing in a mikvah helps for all kinds of spiritual contamination. Rebbe Nachman spoke much about the great virtue of regularly immersing in a mikvah and Breslover Chassidim traditionally do so every day. Water also hints to prayer, as it is written (Eichah, ch. 2): "Pour out your heart like water in the Presence of Hashem." For the main rectification of the metzora is to pour out his speech and prayer before Hashem like water, and then the Kohein will show him the path of return to Hashem. The purification process of the metzora also includes two live kosher birds – one is slaughtered and the other is set free into an open field. It is explained in the holy Zohar (Parshas Metzora 53b; also mentioned in Lekutei Mohoran, Part I, Lesson 3) that the two live kosher birds correspond to the sefiros of Binah (Understanding) and Malchus (Kingship). The bird that corresponds to the sefirah of Binah comes to rectify what he blemished with his thoughts. Because he did not contemplate Hashem's G-dliness that shines throughout the entire creation but instead entertained evil and negative thoughts about people, he eventually came to speak loshon harah and rechilus about them. And the bird that corresponds to the sefirah of Malchus comes to rectify the blemish of speech, for the main way we accept Hashem's kingship upon ourselves is through speech, which is prayer and Hisbodedus. And when one has blemished his speech, his acceptance of Hashem's kingship has been undermined. The bird that corresponds to Malchus is slaughtered in order to correct his damaged speech, of which it is said (Yirmiyahu, ch. 9): "Their tongue is a sharpened arrow; it speaks deceit," for it is necessary to completely put an end to evil speech. After the first bird has been slaughtered, the second bird that corresponds to the sefirah of Binah is set free and released upon the open field, for as soon as we have rectified speech, then Binah, which is the mind, has also been set free - free to take off and fly; free to contemplate Hashem's G-dliness once again. And may Hashem help us to purify our minds from all kinds of impurities and we will use our speech only for holy words of Torah and prayer until we merit to ascend and be included in Him completely, now and forever. Amen v'amen.
